The radiance awakens a blinding light that radiates outward from the Sun Stone.

Añil: The teleportation ritual is about to begin.

Añil: Be prepared, miss. You may experience some side effects from the process.

Lorentz Butterfly: Time to see what this auction's all about.

Past the witching hour, in the dark of the cemetery, a candle is lit. A pair of still eyes gaze deeply into the little flame.

Ramona: The auction should've started a while ago.

Ramona: So why isn't anything happening? This guy isn't exactly the type to joke about this kind of stuff.

Her patience wears thin; a crackle of frustration ripples in her voice.

Loggerhead: The candle's almost burnt out.

Loggerhead: What's it supposed to do?

Loggerhead cups her hands around the candle's flame, shielding it from the wind so it doesn't burn too fast.

Ramona: It isn't just a candle; it's an arcane tool. See the carvings on the side? It's an ancient ritual. The Codex Mendoza says it was once used in sacred offerings.

Ramona: It has a synchronizing effect. When a specific ritual starts elsewhere, lighting this candle will replicate it here.

Ramona: But we've only got one chance.

The candle has nearly melted away. The flame falters. Hope seems lost. Until the dying flame gives out, and in its place an arcane array appears as a gale-force wind sweeps down around them.

Ramona: Brace yourself! It's happening!

The wind howls, swallowing her body and voice.

Loggerhead: AHHHHHHH!!!

Loggerhead: The Foundation really needs to start selling their teleport disks in these new eras!
