Regulus: And ... done! Phew! That was a long take!

X: There are so many of us in the suitcase, after all. It just takes a long time to record everyone's blessing. Now, let's hang it somewhere.

Regulus: Hang it for what? You're not going to make it another "Goldburger" machine that hits its victims from above, are you? Though I enjoy playing pranks, I'll hate you if I have to stay alert even in the suitcase!

Sonetto: No ... It's a tradition from the east. Madam Z said people hung lanterns during Dùshuò Festival to express their blessings for their friends and family.

Sotheby: Oh, I understand that! My family used to hang ornaments too, like mistletoe and the Quiet Ravenheart!

Druvis III: Heh heh ... Yes, there are similar traditions all over the world. The ornaments people hang may differ, but they have the same meaning—to express the anticipation for reunion.

Druvis III: I found a good spot. Let's hang it here.

Sotheby: Perfect! Vertin will notice it as soon as she comes back!

An-an Lee: The suitcase is like a giftbox laa!

Sotheby: I can't wait to see her reaction!

Sonetto: I hope Timekeeper likes it.

Regulus: Me too ... so she may give us a few more days off!

An-an Lee: Agreed, haha ... Hmm? The signal light is on the blink ...

X: But we already turned it off. Wait, Regulus ... Did you press the button when we started recording?

An-an Lee: Shoot! So it didn't record our blessing ...
