Ezio: I have this feeling that you're from a distant place, perhaps a distant time, even.

Ezio: Though many questions remain, I suppose you're not the one to answer them.

Ezio: Still, I'm grateful to have spent this time with you. It has been an honor and a great blessing.

Ezio: May we all learn to savor the beauty of life while we still have it.

Kassandra: Alexios has brought many problems to us both, hasn't he? Sometimes reaching him seems like a task greater than Demeter's search for Persephone.

Kassandra: So you really do understand me? I should thank the Gods, but I can't help wishing they'd have sent you to me sooner.

Kassandra: Now let's enjoy the feast. Maybe we'll find some more time to complain about our families together before we part ways.
