???: "... The reality has shown itself ..."

???: "Take the path you have already taken, walk the way you have already walked."

???: The key to resolving this crisis is ...

BANG!

Somewhere in the Suitcase

Matilda: Ouh là!

Matilda: Wh-Who dares interrupt the Great Matilda's prophecy!

Ms. Radio: News of the day. Leilani and Eagle are kicking off their shooting competition, with targets brought in by Balloon Party.

BANG! BANG! BANG!

Matilda: According to the crystal orb's vision, a completely new threat is emerging in the Suitcase. Of course, as a mature and responsible adult, I will steer clear of any trouble.

Matilda: However, the growing number of teenagers in this place will undoubtedly cause increasing disorder—watch your tail!

Nautika: My apologies! I should, um, go pitch the tent over there.

APPLe: From what this APPLe has seen, people's energy levels rise in sync with the Carnival countdown.

Regulus: Let's fire up those speakers!

APPLe: ... The Captain is a bit of an exception. Her energy remains exceptionally high no matter the circumstances.

Sotheby: Ms. Bouanich, have you figured out the solution?

Matilda: Certainly. My vision suggests we are like a small boat drifting through a chaotic sea, with clueless fools guiding us without knowing where we are headed.

Matilda: What we really need is to name Le Pape des fous or La Papesse des folles. As everyone knows, every "Cité-État" needs a "lord."

Matilda: And since the Great Matilda Bouanich is undoubtedly a stellar candidate, I believe it is time that we declare ...

Sotheby: Vertin! Oh, let's make Vertin a crown! And a parade island too, so we can carry her statue through the Carnival while we throw candies up into the air; it will look just like a fairy tale!

Lilya: Fine by me. She's the boss.

Matilda: Yes ... yes, of course, Vertin. But I would ask that you not forget who came up with this genius plan.

Matilda: Until Maman is back on her feet, Matilda is, without a doubt, the world's greatest diviner!

Somewhere in the Suitcase

Sotheby: Ms. Bouanich's vision says the float has to be decorated with only "the most simple and ordinary things."

Sotheby: But royal crowns are usually made of gold ... unless this is some kind of riddle?

Sonetto: Ms. Sotheby, if we actually create a pure gold crown for our La Papesse des folles, that is, the Timekeeper's float ...

Lilya: Then we'll have a Vertin float crushed into a blinchik, haha!

Sonetto: In Carnival tradition, La Papesse des folles stands for a world turned upside down—rich and poor, noble and common, sacred and secular, all flipped around.

Sonetto: So, then we might be better off searching for materials that are the direct opposite of the conventional.

Sotheby: Opposite ... Look! What's that over there?

A line of Critters walks unsteadily by, balancing large pieces of flattened cardboard boxes on their heads.

Without attracting any attention, the chief assistant collects a piece of cardboard.

Sonetto: This could be exactly what we've been looking for.

Lilya: Who was the last person that tried taking materials from these little guys? Was it Medicine Pocket?

Sotheby: I do believe these creatures would happily trade with us if we can provide them with a sufficient amount of Dust.

Sotheby: Our materials are secured, so the next step must be writing the coronation blessings on the crown.

Sotheby: But I haven't any idea what to say. Maybe you can find the right words, Sonetto.

The chief assistant pulls out her glasfeder. Delicately twirling it over the cardboard as she thinks. Finally, she launches into a dance of delicate strokes that begin to glow faintly as she raises her glasfeder.

Sonetto: I believe in you.
